A Candidacy Worth While.

Fietcher D. Proctor has received his omination for the governorship of Vermont at the hands of the Republicans of the state in a manner which gives great satisfaction to the personal friends which he numbers by the hundred in every part of the state. While openly and avowedly a candidate he refused to be drawn into any personal contest for the nomination, and the honor is his without any act or effort or use of political methods by himself or his friends to lessen his self-respect or lower the standard of his own manhood. In his appearance before the povention after his nomination had been unanimously carried no man, in a similar place, has ever made a stronger or more favgrable impression. Of his speech of cceptance and his declaration of the principles and methods which he believes to be essential for the upbuilding of Vermont it has been aptly said by not a few of the delegates present that the convention might well have adopted this speech as its platform without addition or amendment. This is a kind of political preferment that is worth while.

Platform and ticket are all right.

Compared with the so-called Clement convention of four years ago, with its dramatic climaxes, the gathering today was mild-mannered, but it was above the average of such meetings in point of interest and features, among which Proctor's speech of acceptance takes first place. His declaration might well have been adopted as the party platform. It clear thoughtful sumary which reads well, and which was delivered with dignity and effect. Democrats in the gallery and Republicans who have never adherents of the Proctors joined with the others in its praise. Vermont has had no governor in recent years who under similar conditions could have made an address comparable with Mr. Proctor's utterance.

E. B. Flinn of Springfield, following J. L. Martin's presentation of Mr. Merrifield's name for the lieutenant governorspeak for Mr. Leland. made the hit of the day, which convulsed the entire convention with laughter. He said that it was difficult for him to speak, following the orator from Brattleboro, as it was known that any man in Brattlecrats of the state have nothing whatever | boro could make a better nominating speech than any other man in the state "They're more used to it," of Vermont. they would lose their autonomy and the he declared, and before the uproar had subsided he added. "I am told that the making of nominating speeches and the acceptance of nominations is a part of the course in Brattleboro's public schools."

There were several good speeches dur-ing the day and a large number of the perfunctory secondings. It was a field day for the newspaper men, who made a ger nominated his townsman, Mr. Fleet-wood, for the secretaryship and good sec-onding speeches were made by Frank L. Greene of the St. Albans Messenger and L. H. Lewis of the Morrisville News and Citizen. Joseph Auld of the Burlington News was also heard—but that's another story, as Kipling might remark. The preliminary scenes and incidents were similar to those of all such gatherings and there was the usual lateness in arriving at the convention hall. That M. Chapman of Middlebury, chairman of the Republican state committee, called the convention to order about 10.20 and Rev. H. A. Roberts of Montpeller offered pray-er. Alfred E. Watson of Hartford, secretary of the state committee, read the call and announced that 717 of the 786 delegates entitled to a place were present. The reading of the roll was dispensed with on motion of W. A. Lord of Montpeller, and Mr. Chapman announced the choice of W. J. Bigelow of Burlington for chair-of W. J. Bigelow of Burlington for chairman and A. E. Watson of Hartford for temporary secretary.

Mr. Bigelow, on being introduced, thanked the delegates for the honor which he said he accepted with a high degree of pleasure and some sense of confidence because he felt the convention would be entirely become the convention. cause he felt the convention would be entirely harmonicus. The great abundance of good material, he said, would give rise to some contests, but all the contestants were honorable men, determined to be loyal, though they cannot all be victorious. The verdict of the convention, he continued, was already formed, unanimous in its choice of a leader and strongly determined that the Republican candidates shall go before the people this year as the champions of honest, progressive, ly determined that the Republican candidates shall go before the people this year as the champions of honest, progressive, economical and efficient government. Vermonters are not merely Republicans—they are Reosevelt Republicans, and that means they are ready to strike at fraud and wrong-doing in public and private life wherever it appears. It means the full and faithful performance of duty no matter what the cost or sacrifice. It means victory because it is an honest victory, necessary to the honest demands of the people. He reviewed succinctly the accompilshments of the party in state affairs in the last four legislatures.

The temporary organization was made permanent on motion of O. M. Barber of Bennington. J. L. Martin moved that a committee of one from each county be appointed a committee on resolutions and that all resolutions be referred to that committee before being considered by the convention. The committee was made up as follows by counties: Addison, R. W. McCuen; Bennington, O. M. Barber; Rutland, J. F. Manning; Chittenden, Joseph Auld; Lamoille, D. H. Lamberton; Franklin,

The chairman requested all who wished to make nominating speeches to step to the platform. On the call for nominations for governor, F. C. Partridge of Proctor appeared. His opening utterance was a direct reference to Clement when he said that the delegates had met under unique circumstances. "For some time the consensus of Republican sentiment has clearly indicated the result of ment has clearly indicated the result of the nomination to be made. The very unanimity of that sentiment has led one unanimity of that sentiment has led one who first sought your endorsement to revolt in advance against your action. We are not disturbed by the peculiar campaign which is threatened, for we know that the natural choice of a leader this year by the great body of Republicans of the state is based in fact upon that sensible judgment which has always characterized our people." He said at this point: "In this age of progress. Vermont cannot stand still. To a better and a greater Vermont we must dedicate our deepest sympathies and our highest efforts. We peculiarly need at this time forts. We peculiarly need at this time a wise and sane leader who will inspire in every department of the public service the application of up-to-date business principles, sound sense, and old-fashioned honesty. The governor of this state ought to be first of all a true Vermonter, representative of the sterling good sense and sturdy charcater of her people, in touch with that spirit of progress which characterizes the present age, in sym-pathy with that conservatism which very properly is natural to our people, and fitted by character and ability to lead, so far as a governor can lead, in every laudable effort along sound lines for the highest development of our state."

He touched briefly upon Fletcher Proctor's career as a business man and as a legislator and spoke of his long record of public duties well performed while

In closing, he said: "Simple and unaffect-In closing, he said: "Simple and unaffected, but always wise and strong, under his leadership and direction the highest interests of the state will be safeguarded, those things which make for a larger and better Vermont will be encouraged, and the state at all times and under all circumstances will be worthly represented." The entire speech was a finished product. The first seconding speech was a rythmic ripple from John L. Lewis of Troy, who is a "dead ringer" in personal appearance to Laurier, the Canadian premier. Then followed E. J. Booth of Burlington, Roger Hurlburd of Hyde Park, C. W. Thurber of Danville, Frank L.

W. Thurber of Danville, Frank L. Greene of St. Albans, E. L. Bates of Ben-nington, Dr. B. C. Noble of Middlebury, Joseph Auld of Burlington, F. H. Bickford of Bradford and C. R. Crosby of Brattleboro. The speakers appeared on behalf of their respective counties. Mr. Crosby laid particular emphasis upon Fletcher Proctor as a business man for governor. Mr. Auld read a pretty essay -a pastel-but the crowd grew restive —a pastel—but the crowd grew restive while he reeled off his well rounded platitudes and tried to drown him out with applause. But he persisted and managed to finish like a wind-broken colt. The nemination was made by acclamation, heartily and unanimously.

E. M. Bartlett of Island Pond moved that a committee of three be appointed to inform Mr. Proctor and to request his appearance before the convention. The chairman named Mr. Bartlett, Robert McLoud of Sheldon and H. F. Noyes of Rutland. The Montpeller Military band struck up "Hall to the Chief" when Mr. Proctor appeared and deafening cheers and applause continued for several min-utes. Mr. Proctor's speech is reproduced in full on page 3.

On the call for nominations for the lieutenant governorship J. L. Martin said that when starting to take the train for Montpeller a man asked him to present his name to the convention, but urged him not to say too much. Mr. Martin said to him, "I may tell the truth about you," and receiving an affirmative reply he had added, "Then I have no bounda." He said his candidate would have the sup-port of the entire state if he did not live in the most modest county and he wished that he might move to Newport or to some other town. In presenting Mr. Merrifield's name he referred to him as "a man whom no Republican, no Democrat, no secessionist can hesitate to vote for." E. B. Flinn of Springfield, who was the endorser of George F. Leland of that town, then made his bright strategic stroke cisewhere referred to and fur-nished about all the fun that came in Ex-Lieut.-Gov. Z. M. Mansur seemed extremely tame after following two such extremely tame after following two such forceful speakers, but the Prouty forces were already too strongly entrenched to be shaken by mediocre seconding speeches. Mr. Mansur urged in closing that a business man be nominated for lieutenant-governor as a running mate to the business man already at the head of the ticket. Then followed a long number of seconding speeches, mostly for Prouty and Merrifield. John M. Harvey of Montpelier spoke well for Prouty, with a reference to the industrial condition and to a man in the marble business allied to one in the lumber business. Roger Huriburd of Hyde Park, who followed, aptly remarked that marble and lumber were not to be despised but "let us not forget men," and he then mentioned Mr. Merrifield's name.

"This is the time and I am here to nominate the man," shouted W. A. Lord of Montpeller in nominating Edward H. Deavitt of that city for state treasurer. He declared that the choice of Mr. Deavitt would bring strength to the centre of would bring strength to the centre of for Mr. Deavitt they would 'never cease to regret' their action. He urged that a financier should handle the $1,750,00 of the state business and spoke of the long established custom of having a banking man as state treasurer.

The name of C. H. Strong of Vergennes was presented by M. F. Barnes of Middlebury in rather disjointed sentences and with the geographical argument as the burden of his remarks. A dozen seconding speeches followed, mostly for Mr. Deavitt. W. F. Root of Brattleboro seconded Mr. Strong "in behalf of a large majority of the Windham county delegates" and a little later A. V. D. Piper of Jamaica effectively seconded Mr. Deavitt, also "in behalf of a large majority from Windham county.
